R.A.A.C. Order No. 16-02189

vs.

Referee Decision No. 0028379634-02U

Employer/Appellee

ORDER OF REEMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE APPEALS COMMISSION

This case comes before the Commission for disposition of the claimant's appeal pursuant to Section 443.151(4)(c), Florida Statutes, of a referee's decision holding the claimant disqualified from receipt of benefits.

Pursuant to the appeal filed in this case, the Reemployment Assistance Appeals Commission has conducted a complete review of the evidentiary hearing record and decision of the appeals referee. See §443.151(4)(c), Fla. Stat. The Commission's review is generally limited to the evidence and issues before the referee and contained in the official record.

The issue before the Commission is whether the claimant voluntarily left work without good cause within the meaning of Section 443.101(1), Florida Statutes.

The referee made the following findings of fact:

> The claimant was hired on March 21, 2016, and worked in the laundry room of a hotel. When the claimant was originally hired she was told that she would be doing rooms. The claimant was told that [she] would get six or seven hours a day but that the hours varied and there were no set hours. The claimant would be paid $10.00 per hour. The claimant was then told that she would be working in laundry because they were short staffed there. The claimant's duties were to fold sheets and towels. The claimant worked six days the first week. The claimant worked from 6:30 pm to 12:00 am. The claimant was paid $9.00 per hour. The claimant was called into the office on March 25, 2016 and told that > the employees' days were cut. The claimant worked three days during the week ending April 8, 2016. The claimant was called to confirm that she was working on April 10, 2016, the claimant informed the employer that she was but that it would be her last day. On April 10, 2016, the claimant quit.

Based on these findings, the referee held the claimant voluntarily left work without good cause attributable to the employing unit. Upon review of the record and the arguments on appeal, the Commission concludes the referee did not adequately address one issue in the legal analysis, and the employer was not given the opportunity to participate in the hearing; consequently, the case must be remanded.

The claimant testified at the hearing that she accepted a position to work six days per week and six or seven hours per day, with no set hours. Her rate of pay was to be $10.00 per hour. She further testified that after she began work, her supervisor apologized to her and advised that both her hours per day and her days per week would be reduced. The claimant was scheduled three days of work the following week, and was scheduled shorter shifts. While the claimant had accepted some variability in her schedule, she had not anticipated her schedule would be cut by more than half. Additionally, she was paid $9.00 per hour, rather than the $10 she was promised.

This testimony was different, however, than the claimant's statement given to the adjudicator during the fact-finding investigation. In that statement, the claimant only referenced a commitment as to the number of hours per day and not the number of days per week. The referee apparently rejected the claimant's hearing testimony that she was promised six days per week due to that discrepancy. This portion of the decision was within the referee's province as finder of fact. However, the referee's findings also reflect that she accepted the claimant's testimony that the claimant was promised a rate of pay of $10.00 per hour, and that the claimant was only paid $9.00 per hour.

As a matter of contract law, commitments by the employer as to hours and rate of pay are not generally enforceable prospectively absent a contract for a definite term of employment. Demarco v. Publix Super Mkts. Inc., 360 So. 2d 134 (Fla. 3d DCA 1978), affirmed, Demarco v. Publix Super Mkts., Inc., 384 So. 2d 1253 (Fla. 1980). This is even true under promissory estoppel. W.R. Grace & Co. v. Geodata Services, Inc., 547 So. 2d 919 (Fla. 1989). However, under reemployment assistance law, the courts have long held that an employer's unilateral and substantial[1] change to an employee's agreed terms of employment may constitute good cause for the employee to quit. Curras v. Unemployment Appeals Commission, 841 So. 2d 673 (Fla. 3d DCA 2003); Lecroy v. Unemployment Appeals Commission, 654 So. 2d 1054 (Fla. 1st DCA 1995).[2] The fact that an employer is legally entitled to change an employee's terms of employment under the at-will employment doctrine, in the absence of a contract for a definite term, is not controlling in determining whether such a change constitutes good cause to quit. Manning v. Unemployment Appeals Commission, 787 So. 2d 954 (Fla. 4th DCA 2001); Ferguson v. Henry Lee Co., 734 So. 2d 1161 (Fla. 3d DCA 1999); R.A.A.C. Order No. 13-07307 (April 18, 2014). Although not explained as such, the rationale in these cases is essentially a reliance theory: an employer makes an offer of a job, and an employee accepts it, with certain mutual understandings about the job. Had those job terms been different, the employee may have declined the job, or may have accepted another job with terms more to her liking. Thus, a unilateral and substantial modification of those commitments may provide good cause to quit, depending upon the circumstances. See R.A.A.C. Order No. 15-03751 at pgs. 4-5 & n.1 (February 16, 2016).[3]

Reviewing the decision in light of these principles, the referee failed to address the significance of the alleged unilateral reduction in rate of pay. A one dollar per hour reduction is clearly substantial, particularly for an individual making only a little above the state minimum wage. In Lecroy, the court concluded a five percent reduction in pay supported a finding of good cause. On remand, the referee must consider whether the prior salary was actually promised to the claimant, and if so, whether the employer unilaterally altered that agreement.

[1] Some of our cases have used the word "material" as an alternative to "substantial." "Material" in this usage in synonymous with "substantial." For purposes of clarity, however, we modify any prior precedent to conform to the "unilateral and substantial" language of Curras v. Unemployment Appeals Commission, cited herein.

[2] Some older cases quote referees' decisions that discuss a "violation" or "breach" of the employment agreement. See, e.g., San Roman v. Unemployment Appeals Commission, 711 So. 2d 93 (Fla. 4th DCA 1998); Wilson v. Unemployment Appeals Commission, 604 So. 2d 1274 (Fla. 4th DCA 1992). This language is inaccurate because, as explained in cases such Ferguson v. Henry Lee Co., cited herein, the proper rationale is not a breach or violation of a legal duty, but instead a doctrine developed under unemployment law nationally that provides good cause in such cases notwithstanding the employer's right to change the conditions of a job under the employment at will doctrine.

Finally, prior to the hearing, the employer provided two contact names and three telephone numbers on documents submitted to the Department, including the fact-finding statement that was attached to the notice of hearing. Nevertheless, the referee made no attempt to contact the employer for the hearing. Accordingly, the referee's decision is vacated and the cause is remanded to provide the employer an opportunity to appear at a hearing.

The parties are warned that the testimony of the witnesses not subject to cross-examination at prior hearings due to the absence of the opposing party will most likely be rejected as incompetent and, as such, given no consideration if the witnesses are not available during subsequent hearings. See Altimeaux v. Ocean Construction, Inc., 782 So. 2d 922 (Fla. 2d DCA 2001). The referee shall specifically notice the parties of this fact when appropriate and record all attempts to telephone the parties.

The decision of the appeals referee is vacated and the case is remanded for further proceedings.

It is so ordered.

APPEARANCES Claimant

DECISION OF APPEALS REFEREE

Important appeal rights are explained at the end of this decision.

Derechos de apelación importantes son explicados al final de esta decisión.

Yo eksplike kèk dwa dapèl enpòtan lan fen desizyon sa a.

Issues Involved:

SEPARATION: Whether the claimant was discharged for misconduct connected with work or voluntarily left work without good cause as defined in the statute, pursuant to Sections 443.101(1), (9), (10), (11), (13); 443.036(29), Florida Statutes; Rule 73B-11.020, Florida Administrative Code.

Findings of Fact: The claimant was hired on March 21, 2016, and worked in the laundry room of a hotel. When the claimant was originally hired she was told that she would be doing rooms. The claimant was told that would get six or seven hours a day but that the hours varied and there were no set hours. The claimant would be paid $10.00 per hour. The claimant was then told that she would be working in laundry because they were short staffed there. The claimant's duties were to fold sheets and towels. The claimant worked six days the first week. The claimant worked from 6:30 pm to 12:00 am. The claimant was paid $9.00 per hour. The claimant was called into the office on March 25, 2016 and told that the employees' days were cut. The claimant worked three days during the week ending April 8, 2016. The claimant was called to confirm that she was working on April 10, 2016, the claimant informed the employer that she was but that it would be her last day. On April 10, 2016, the claimant quit.

Conclusions of Law: The record reflects the claimant quit. In cases of a quit, the burden is on the claimant to establish that the quitting was for good cause attributable to the employer. The law provides that a claimant who voluntarily left work without good cause as defined in the statute will be disqualified for benefits. "Good cause" includes only cause attributable to the employing unit or illness or disability of the claimant requiring separation from the work. However, a claimant who voluntarily left work to return immediately when called to work by a permanent employing unit that temporarily terminated the claimant's work within the previous 6 calendar months, or to relocate due to a military-connected spouse's permanent change of station, activation, or unit deployment orders, is not subject to this disqualification.

Since the claimant left employment for reasons other than those listed above, Florida Reemployment Assistance law requires disqualification. The claimant quit because she wanted more days. The claimant was not promised a set schedule. There were conflicts in the claimant's hearing and pre-hearing statements. The referee is charged with resolving these conflicts. The referee finds that the claimant was not promised a set schedule, therefore was not promised six days a week. The claimant contended that she needed more money and could not work just three days. However, there was ongoing work available at the time the claimant quit. Although the claimant's reasons for leaving the job may have been personally compelling, they do not meet the qualification requirements for Reemployment Assistance benefits. Therefore, the claimant is disqualified for the receipt of benefits.

Decision: The determination dated May 3, 2016, is AFFIRMED the claimant is disqualified from the receipt of benefits from April 9, 2016, and until the claimant earns $2,856.00.

If this decision disqualifies and/or holds the claimant ineligible for benefits already received, the claimant will be required to repay those benefits. The specific amount of any overpayment will be calculated by the department and set forth in a separate overpayment determination, unless specified in this decision. However, the time to request review of this decision is as shown above and is not stopped, delayed or extended by any other determination, decision or order.

This is to certify that a copy of the above decision was distributed/mailed to the last known address of each interested party on June 13, 2016.
